

I am glad that this act was signed into law. I know that I will be putting my number on the list as soon as July 1, 2003. I agree that the statute should restrict the use of automatic phone system and the prerecorded messages because they are really annoying. Especially when I am doing something important and then the phone rings and it is a dumb recorded message.

The thing that I worry most about when solicitors call and want money is that I am going to get scammed. The people never give up when you say "NO" and they are very rude. If they want to be rude to me, I can be rude right back, but then that puts me in a bad mood. It would be nice not dealing with them at all. Who wants to buy items for someone who is rude and mean? Plus they always call at dinnertime, when it is suppose to be family time.

I like that the FCC will be looking at all the consumer's numbers who have placed their number on the list. That will show that most of the people in this country find solicitors to be annoying. Another point I like that the FCC will be paying attention to is the number of people paying fees for access to the registry and the amount of such fees.

I strongly agree with the goal that the FCC has set out to do. The goal of this act is to increase consumer's privacy. I personally cannot afford to go out and buy a telezapper, so it will be nice this summer to get on the list so I can eat dinner in peace. I don't think that people should have to go out and buy a special item that will block annoying solicitors.
